

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

During my research in the Netherlands and abroad, I have been fortunate to receive generous assistance from different quarters which has helped me to complete this work successfully. This would not have been possible without the assistance of the TANAP (Towards a New Age of Partnership) Programme and those people who are associated with it at the Leiden University. I remember with gratitude the support and assistance given by the Programme co-ordinator Dr Hendrik E. Niemeijer during the initial stage of my research in the Netherlands. I am also grateful for the institutional and personal assistance given by the Programme secretary Marijke van Wissen-van Staden throughout the five years of my research at the University.

It was the facilities provided by the National Archives, The Hague, the British Library in London, the Tamilnadu State Archives in Chennai and the kind assistance of the staff of these institutions which helped me to complete my archival research as smoothly as possible. I specially thank the staff in the National Archives, the Hague, for their assistance during the last few years. I also express my sincere thanks to the facilities provided by the Leiden University Library, KITLV, and the Kern Institute Library and their staff.

I cannot but remember the names of my teachers who helped me master the Dutch language and paleography without which it would have been literally impossible to complete my research without the deepest gratitude. In this respect, the successful completion of this work owes a great debt to Yolande Spaans, René Wezel, Ton Harmsen, and Hugo s'Jacob. My sincere thanks are offered to Rosemary Robson for editing my English and Cynthia Viallé who wholeheartedly helped me in editing the thesis.

The TANAP Programme gave me an opportunity to meet young scholars from different parts of the world. Their support was the spur gave me enough inspiration to complete this work on time. I gratefully acknowledge the names of my TANAP friends Hwee Hui Kian, Ota Atsushi, Ryuto Shimada, Bhawan Ruangsilp, Liu Yong, Anjana Singh, Chiu Hsin Hui, Hoang Anh Tuan, Chris Nierstrasz, Filipa de Silva, Roman Siebertz, and Alicia Schrikker. I am fully aware that a word of thanks is not enough to express my gratitude to Gulam Ahmed Nadri, Karuna Sharma, and Prasanna Kumar Patra who stood by me through these years of stress and strain and provided me with the warmth and happiness of an 'Indian Home' far away from my home. I also thank my friend Olaf Husmann who prepared the maps of this thesis, and my aunt Sister Maria Thomas Puthothu and my wife Beena whose companionship and care have unfailingly helped me to refresh my spirit throughout these years. Indeed, the support of my mother and brother in India was the greatest inspiration throughout these years without which I would not have completed this work.

NOTES ON PLACE AND PERSONAL NAMES

Concerning place names, I preferred to be consistent by using the best-known forms which appear in the Dutch and English sources throughout the book. However, sometimes I have used names which appear to me nearer to their original forms. For example, I have used 'Dharmapatanam' instead of its modern form 'Dharmadam', or 'Dharmapatam' which appears in Dutch and English sources. In general, I have reproduced the titles and personal names of the local people as they appear in Dutch manuscripts. But, occasionally I have favoured to use names and titles, about which I am certain, in their original forms. Instead of 'Adersia' or 'Adji raja' I have used 'the Ali Raja'. Likewise, I preferred to use 'Vazhunnavar' instead of 'Balnoor'.

Place names in the book

Corresponding local names

Cannanore

Kannur

Calicut

Kozhikode

Cochin

Kochi

Tellichery

Thalasseri

Dharmapatanam

Dharmadam

Baliapatanam

Valarpatanam

Quilon

Kollam

Manglore

Mangalapuram