TABLE OF CONTENTS

Acknowledgements

List of tables, diagram, maps and charts

Pictures

Introduction

| Objective of the research and research questions | 4 |
| Contribution and limit of the research           | 10 |
| Brief description of three fieldwork sites       | 13 |
| Research methodology                             | 20 |

Chapter 1 Changing of marriage regimes and gender relations in Chinese society

| 1.1. Conceptualising Chinese kinship              | 26 |
| 1.1.1 Family and kinship (jia)                   | 26 |
| 1.1.2 Fang and fenjia                            | 28 |
| 1.1.3 Power and pollution of women in Chinese kinship | 30 |
| 1.1.4 Sketches of traditional ideals and practices or Chinese marriage | 33 |
| 1.2. Marriage regimes and gender relations in contemporary China | 36 |
| 1.2.1 Radical redefinition of the marriage regime in Maoist era | 36 |
| 1.2.2 Marriage regimes in the era of reform      | 40 |
| 1.2.3 Demographic features and gender roles in economic reform era | 43 |
| 1.2.4 Perceptions towards international marriages | 46 |
| 1.3 Marriage regimes and gender relations in Taiwan | 48 |
| 1.3.1 Traditional ideals and Japanese period: similarity and difference among ethnic groups | 48 |
| 1.3.2 Post WWII development                      | 52 |
| 1.3.3 Demographic change and gender roles        | 54 |
| 1.4. Matchmaking and mate choice in contemporary China and Taiwan | 57 |
| 1.4.1 Criteria of mate choice                    | 57 |
| 1.4.2 Matchmaking principles and matchmaker      | 61 |
| 1.4.3 Marriage transaction                       | 63 |
| 1.4.4 Marital decision: fate and/or agency?      | 65 |
| 1.5 New framework of Chinese relatedness         | 67 |
Chapter 2 Migration in contemporary China

2.1 Literature review of marriage migration
2.1.1 Working definition and clarification of terminology
2.1.2 Situating marriage migration theory in the development of migration theories
2.2 Internal and international marriage migration in China
2.2.1 Development of the policy controlling population movement: Hukou system
2.2.2 Trends of women’s internal migration
2.2.3 Rural young girls in the city and their life choices
2.3 Demographic features of cross-border and cross-straits marriages in Taiwan
2.3.1 Some note on statistical data and methodology
2.3.2 Numbers and sex ratio of cross-border marriages – an historical overview
2.3.3 Age and age gap
2.3.4 Socio-economic status: education and occupation
2.3.5 Previous marital experience and co-habiting kin
2.3.6 Means of introduction
2.3.7 Ethnic composition and place of origin
2.3.8 Discussion: the links and differences between domestic labour, sex work and women’s marriage migration
2.4 Motivation of cross-border marriage
2.4.1 Why marriage and/or remarriage?
2.4.2 Why leaving home? Dissatisfaction and constraints experienced at home
2.4.3 Why going to Taiwan? Aspirations towards migratory destination
2.5 Concluding remark: why cross-border marriages? Significance of meso-factors

Chapter 3 Popular discourse and politics of cross-strait marriages in Taiwan

3.1 Introduction
3.1.1 Working definitions of key concepts: nationalism, citizenship and social exclusion
3.1.2 Chinese nationalism and ethnic relations in Taiwan
3.1.3 Taiwanese nationalism
3.2 Pre-1992 period: forbidden contact, illegal contacts and legalization
3.2.1 Political context: standoff – relaxation
3.2.2 Media representation on cross-strait people’s movement 1987-1991
3.3 1992-1996: from resistance to acceptance. Main concern: population quality
3.3.1 Cross-strait interaction: Political divergence and economic integration
3.3.2 Domestic politics of the making of the Act Governing Relations between Peoples of the Taiwan area and the Mainland Area (AGRPTM)
3.3.3 The AGRPTM’s discourse on issues related to cross-strait marriages
3.3.3.1 Category of Mainland Chinese’s residential status
3.3.3.2 Criteria of mainland spouses’ residential status – bogus marriages
3.3.3.3 Inheritance of pensions and welfare entitlements of veterans
3.3.4 Discussion: citizenship as membership of kinship and nation
3.4 1996-2000: from acceptance to assimilation
3.4.1 Policy discourse
3.4.1.1 Quota system and pressure from the grassroots
3.4.1.2 Framing the issues: rights to work and health care
3.4.1.3 Recruitment of mainland guest workers
3.4.2. Opinions of other social actors
3.4.3 Media representation
3.4.4 Discussion: differentiated citizenship: gendered social rights
3.5 2000-2004: a new form of exclusion under growing Taiwanese nationalism
3.5.1 Domestic politics and cross-strait interaction
3.5.2 Media representation: from mainland brides to Chinese whore
3.5.3 Policy discourse: resurgence of fear over bogus marriage
3.5.3.1 Double track system
3.5.3.4 Screening mechanism
3.5.4 Discussion: social exclusion and nationalism
3.6 Concluding remark

Chapter 4 Matchmaking practices and mate choice in cross-border marriages 4.1. Existing concepts coined with commercially arranged marriages
4.1.1 Human trafficking and trafficking in women
4.1.2 Mail Order Brides (MOB) and commodified marriage
4.1.3 Trade marriages
4.2. Earlier matchmaking practices
4.3 Institutionalisation of the brokering industry of cross-border marriages
4.3.1 Typology of organisations in the marriage brokering industry
4.4 Growth and decline of different types of brokerage and its changing operations
4.4.1 Standardised operation
4.4.2 Recent variations
4.4.3 Exceptions: consistent pattern in the veteran’s settlement
4.5. Roles of matchmakers
4.5.1 Actors, services and money flows in matchmaking practices
4.5.2 Matchmakers’ role in deciding ethnicity and origins of brides
4.5.3 Tasks of matchmakers after marriages
4.6 Meanings of economic transactions before and during the wedding
4.7 Actors’ perspectives on trade marriage
4.8 Concluding remark: making sense of commercially arranged marriages

Chapter 5  Negotiation of gender and kinship relations in everyday life
5.1. Perception and expectation of the husband’s family and communities prior to marriage
5.2. Marginal status, controlling and shaming mechanisms
5.3. Gaining recognition and acceptance in different stages
5.3.1. Initial stage
5.3.2 Living across straits
5.3.3 Pregnancy and child birth
5.3.4 Household economy and sexual division of labour
5.3.5 Remarried older brides
5.3.6 Discussion: gendered power relations in life cycle
5.4. Work and autonomy
5.4.1 Availability of jobs: gendered and ethnic labour market
5.4.2 The usage of income
5.4.3 Negotiation between economic independence and familial obligation
5.4.4 Consciousness of autonomy and self-fulfilment
5.4.5 Discussion: gendered power relation and economy
5.5. Consolidating social network
5.5.1 Manoeuvring strategies among different kinship members
5.5.2 Social network among fellow brides
5.5.3 Covering and strengthening “national” and political identity
5.5.4 Discussion: gendered power relations of the weak
5.6 Concluding remark: Gender, yang and care: reconceptualise kinship in Chinese society

Conclusion: Studying gender in the web of relations:
   gender, family, market and the state
Why cross-border marriages?
Mechanism of social exclusion and otherness
List of tables, diagram, maps and charts

Tables

Table 1 Unmarried population and sex-ratio in Taiwan, 2000: according to age 55
Table 2 Unmarried population and sex-ratio in Taiwan, 2000: according to education background and sex 56
Table 3 Estimated number of cross-border marriages with Southeast Asian and PRC nationals in Taiwan: according to nationality 89
Table 4 Number of foreign spouses acquiring long-term residentship: by gender and nationality, 2005 91
Table 5 Social category of Taiwanese spouses 94
Table 6 Employment of Taiwanese spouses 95
Table 7 Marital experiences/status of mainland and foreign spouses in percentage 96
Table 8 Number of foreign spouses and foreign migrant workers by sex and nationality 100
Table 9 Summary of orientations of policies governing cross-strait marriages 112
Table 10 Change of national identity, preference of independence or unification. Comparison of elites and the general public 124
Table 11 Taiwan’s trade dependency on the Mainland, 1986-2004 134
Table 12 Number of Taiwanese people visiting the PRC, with two statistics compiled by ROC and PRC authorities 135
Table 13 The positions of party factions on Mainland policies, 1990-1996 139
Table 14 Numbers of cross-strait marriages and the quota system of resident permits 152
Table 15 Categories of residential status in the double track system 173
Table 16 Typology of marriage brokers/matchmakers 210

Diagram

Diagram 1: Actors, services and money flows in matchmaking practice 208

Maps

Map 1 Taiwan, the ROC and Fujian province, the PRC, indicating three fieldwork sites: Baihe, Hukou and Fuqing 12
Map 2 Fieldwork sites in Taiwan, Hukou township, Hsinchu county and Baihe township, Tainan county 14
Map 3 Fieldwork site 3: Humei Village, Fuqing city, Fujian Province 19

Charts

Chart 1 Number of Cross-border Marriages with Southeast Asian and PRC nationals in Taiwan: according to nationality 108-110
Chart 2 Age distribution of foreign and mainland Chinese female spouses
Chart 3 Age distribution of Taiwanese men in cross-border marriages
Chart 4 Education level of foreign and mainland Chinese spouses
Chart 5 Education level of Taiwanese spouses