Acknowledgements

The clinical side of this research was conducted primarily at the Baptist Medical Centre in Nalerigu, a Southern Baptist Mission Hospital. The astute observations of Dr Vince Waite, who guided my early thinking, were all-important. The help and support of the dedicated BMC staff was appreciated, particularly the missionaries for their clinical guidance and hospitality, the OPD staff for their organisation of patient referrals, and the laboratory staff for allowing us space in their department.

Banle Seidu and Sylvia Kobe were both dedicated and reliable co-workers and friends in both laboratory and village. Much of the field work was performed in Mangol (Mangor) near Bunkpurugu in the northeast corner of the Northern Region, where Chief Kpamka Minpak and Konlan Nimbiat were both supportive and enthusiastic. The hospitality of John and Comfort Laari was valued.

I would like to thank Coby Blotkamp for her training in diagnostic parasitology, both to myself, and to the students, who added much to life and work in Nalerigu (Jeroen Heemskerk, Paul de Vries, Geartsje Boonstra, Juventus Zeim, Anne Duer, Janet Croft and Anneke Droogsma.)

Sharing a beer on the terrace with Steve Athey, Paddy Keenan and Shawn Montgomery cannot be forgotten, and the companionship of Nina Steenhard was crucial. The hospitality of Mr Alando and Julie, Lawrence & Euphemia Yelifari, and Lars & Marianne Mensal was indispensable, as was the friendship and ‘courier service’ of John and Denise Klein Douwel.

Ultrasound tuition was enjoyable under the charge of Dr Jaques van Oostayen and Dr Nestor Spannbrucker. The support and encouragement of the staff at the Danish Bilharziasis Laboratory during the writing phase was invaluable.

My colleagues at the Parasitology Department in Leiden have contributed in many ways to the successful completion of this thesis, by providing a stimulating work environment, by their help with computers, with their smiles during coffee... The hospitality of David and Jacomine Thomas and Marius Sleeuwenhoek was most appreciated. I will really miss my life in Holland.

Finally, I am grateful to my family, for the start they have given me in life and for their continued support, and to my friends here in the UK who have taken me back after 4 years away, despite missed weddings and sporadic contact.
