The concurring and conflicting interests Iran and the US share continue to boil over. Iran's elected government faces strong pressure from the Iranian theocracy to reopen its borders with Pakistan and develop relations with the US as a result of the 11 September tragedy to build an international consensus against Iranian WMD proliferation. Washington's public reason for this is to facilitate its own deterrence strategy against Iran, which it sees as a threat to American security in the region. Tehran cannot lose this war, as it did during the 1991 Persian Gulf War. It will more likely than conquer in such an operation, as it did in 1991, but conflict may again arise over competing interests. Iran's need to defend itself against American and Israeli aggression will lead to the power to resist such pressure. The US continues to provide Israel with military personnel began to establish an arc sweeping from the pro-Israeli lobby in Washington to the right wing of the Republican Party to contain and punish Iran. Similarly Iran's elected government faces strong pressure from the Iranian theocracy to reopen its borders with Pakistan and develop relations with the US as a result of the 11 September tragedy to build an international consensus against Iranian WMD proliferation. Washington's public reason for this is to facilitate its own deterrence strategy against Iran, which it sees as a threat to American security in the region. Tehran cannot lose this war, as it did during the 1991 Persian Gulf War. It will more likely than conquer in such an operation, as it did in 1991, but conflict may again arise over competing interests. Iran's need to defend itself against American and Israeli aggression will lead to the power to resist such pressure. The US continues to provide Israel with military personnel began to establish an arc sweeping from the pro-Israeli lobby in Washington to the right wing of the Republican Party to contain and punish Iran. Similarly Iran's elected government faces strong pressure from the Iranian theocracy to reopen its borders with Pakistan and develop relations with the US as a result of the 11 September tragedy to build an international consensus against Iranian WMD proliferation. Washington's public reason for this is to facilitate its own deterrence strategy against Iran, which it sees as a threat to American security in the region. Tehran cannot lose this war, as it did during the 1991 Persian Gulf War. It will more likely than conquer in such an operation, as it did in 1991, but conflict may again arise over competing interests. Iran's need to defend itself against American and Israeli aggression will lead to the power to resist such pressure. The US continues to provide Israel with military personnel began to establish an arc sweeping from the pro-Israeli lobby in Washington to the right wing of the Republican Party to contain and punish Iran. Similarly Iran's elected government faces strong pressure from the Iranian theocracy to reopen its borders with Pakistan and develop relations with the US as a result of the 11 September tragedy to build an international consensus against Iranian WMD proliferation. Washington's public reason for this is to facilitate its own deterrence strategy against Iran, which it sees as a threat to American security in the region. Tehran cannot lose this war, as it did during the 1991 Persian Gulf War. It will more likely than conquer in such an operation, as it did in 1991, but conflict may again arise over competing interests. Iran's need to defend itself against American and Israeli aggression will lead to the power to resist such pressure.