ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

My three stays in Thiruvananthapuram were made possible by funding from the Leiden University Fund (LUF); a grant from the Nuffic VSBfonds; a grant through the Indo-Dutch Programme on Alternatives in Development (IDPAD) and funding from the Leiden University Institute for Area Studies (LIAS), previously known as the CNWS. For space and general assistance I would also like to thank the staff and members of the International Institute for Asian Studies (IIAS) and the LIAS in Leiden and the Centre for Development Studies (CDS) in Thiruvananthapuram by names of the late K.N.Raj, Soman Nair, Wim Stokhof, Barend ter Haar, Wilfred van Soldt, Ilona Beumer, Wilma Trommelen and Margriet Laere.

I am extremely thankful to the older persons in Thiruvananthapuram who shared their time and thoughts with me. Although most considered it their duty to make some time for a young student from abroad, many gave me much more time, information, consideration, food, shelter, friendship or even a sense of belonging. Whilst their words and actions figure prominently in this thesis, their names remain unmentioned for reasons of anonymity. In particular, I would like to thank my ‘grandparents’. Several associations too—by means of their board members and most active members—were most welcoming to me and allowed me to join in activities and otherwise closed meetings. In particular I would like to mention the Senior Citizens’ Association and the Women Muslim Association. Also my younger friends in Thiruvananthapuram are unforgettable. In particular I would like to mention Sejuti Jha, Dhanya Rejith, Nandana Baruah, Sajitha Karayil, Nadhanael GV and Harilal Madhavan and Alice Sebastian.

Many experts have helped me with advice, analytical comments and practical suggestions: Uma Devi, P.K.B. Nayar, Praveena Kodoth, Leela Gulati, Edith Kuiper, Elisabeth Schröder-Butterfill, Sabine Luning and Arthur Kleinman. Special thanks go to my co-promotor S. Irudaya Rajan and my promotor Carla Risseeuw. I would also like to thank my fellow PhD candidates for their valuable suggestions and our great discussions: Maarten Onneweer, Martijn Wienia, Wendelmoet Hamelink, Roos Gerritsen, Christoph Rippe, Lotte Pelckmans, Metje Postma, Annet Niemeijer, Paul van Enckevort, Jeroen Groenewegen and Annemarie Samuels.

Back home I am thankful for the ongoing support and love from family and friends who are too numerous to mention. Special and very warm thanks go to Bettine, Edith and Jacco and my parents. Finally, my husband Paul has been with me throughout this entire project. Together—and with Jonathan—I am hoping to grow old.
