Introduction

Postage stamps and related objects are miniature communication tools, and they tell a story about cultural and political identities and about artistic forms of identity expressions. They are part of the world’s material heritage, and part of history. Ever more of this postal heritage becomes available online, published by stamp collectors’ organizations, auction houses, commercial stamp shops, online catalogues, and individual collectors. Virtually collecting postage stamps and postal history has recently become a possibility. These working papers about Africa are examples of what can be done. But they are work-in-progress! Everyone who would like to contribute, by sending corrections, additions, and new area studies can do so by sending an email message to the APH editor: Ton Dietz (dietzaj@asc.leidenuniv.nl). You are welcome!

Wikipedia, English version (copied 22/2/2015):

“German South-West Africa campaign, 1914–1915

An invasion of German South-West Africa from the south failed at the Battle of Sandfontein (25 September 1914), close to the border with the Cape Colony. German fusiliers inflicted a serious defeat on the British troops and the survivors returned to British territory. The Germans began an invasion of South Africa to forestall another invasion attempt and the Battle of Kakamas took place on 4 February 1915, between South African and German forces, a skirmish for control of two river fords over the Orange River. The South Africans prevented the Germans from gaining control of the fords and crossing the river. By February 1915, the South Africans were ready to occupy German territory. Botha put Smuts in command of the southern forces while he commanded the northern forces. Botha arrived at Swakopmund on 11 February and continued to build up his invasion force at Walvis Bay (or Walvis Bay), a South African enclave about halfway along the coast of German South West Africa. In March Botha began an advance from Swakopmund along the Swakop valley with its railway line and captured Otjimbingwe, Karibib, Friedrichsfelde, Wilhelmshol and Okahandja and then entered Windhuk on 5 May 1915.

The Germans offered surrender terms, which were rejected by Botha and the war continued. On 12 May Botha declared martial law and divided his forces into four contingents, which cut off German forces in the interior from the coastal regions of Kunene and Kaokoveld and fanned out into the north-east. Lukin went along the railway line from Swakopmund to Tsumeb. The other two columns rapidly advanced on the right flank, Myburgh to Otavi junction and Manie Botha to Tsumeb and the terminus of the railway. German forces in the north-west fought the Battle of Otavi on 1 July but were defeated and surrendered at Khorab on 9 July 1915. In the south, Smuts landed at the South West African naval base at Luderitzbucht, then advanced inland and captured Keetmanshoop on 20 May. The South Africans linked with two columns which had advanced over the border from South Africa. Smuts advanced north along the railway line to Berseba and on 26 May, after two day’s fighting captured Gibeon. The Germans in the south were forced to retreat northwards towards Windhuk and Botha’s force. On 9 July the German forces in the south surrendered.
(Maritz Rebellion, 1914–1915)

General Koos de la Rey, under the influence of Siener van Rensburg, a "crazed seer", believed that the outbreak of war foreshadowed the return of the republic but was persuaded by Botha and Smuts on 13 August not to rebel and on 15 August told his supporters to disperse. At a congress on 26 August De la Rey claimed loyalty to South Africa, not Britain or Germany. The Commandant-General of the Union Defence Force, Brigadier-General Christiaan Frederick Beyers, opposed the war and with the other rebels, resigned his commission on 15 September. General Koos de la Rey joined Beyers and on 15 September they visited Major JCG (Jan) Kemp in Potchefstroom, who had a large armoury and a force of 2,000 men, many of whom were thought to be sympathetic. The South African government believed it to be an attempt to instigate a rebellion, Beyers claimed that it was to discuss plans for a simultaneous resignation of leading army officers, similar to the Curragh incident in Britain.

During the afternoon De la Rey was mistakenly shot and killed by a policeman, at a road block set up to look for the Foster gang and many Afrikaners believed that De la Rey had been assassinated. After the funeral the rebels condemned the war but when Botha asked them to volunteer for military service in South-West Africa they accepted. Maritz, at the head of a commando of Union forces on the border of German South-West Africa, allied with the Germans on 7 October and issued a proclamation on behalf of a provisional government and declared war on the British on 9 October. Generals Beyers, De Wet, Maritz, Kemp and Bezuidenhout were to be the first leaders of a new South African Republic. Maritz occupied Keimoes in the Uppington area. The Lydenburg commando under General De Wet took possession of the town of Heilbron, held up a train and captured government stores and ammunition.

By the end of the week De Wet had a force of 3,000 men and Beyers had gathered c. 7,000 more in the Magaliesberg. General Louis Botha had c. 30,000 pro-government troops. The government declared martial law on 12 October and loyalists under General Louis Botha and Jan Smuts repressed the uprising. Maritz was defeated on 24 October and took refuge with the Germans, the Beyers commando was dispersed at Commissioners Drift on 28 October, after which Beyers joined forces with Kemp and then was drowned in the Vaal River on 8 December. De Wet was captured in Bechuanaland on 2 December and Kemp, having crossed the Kalahari desert and lost 300 of 800 men and most of their horses on the 1,100-kilometre (680 mi) journey, joined Maritz in German South-West Africa and attacked across the Orange river on 22 December. Maritz advanced south again on 13 January 1915 and attacked Upington on 24 January and most of the rebels surrendered on 30 January.

(German invasion of Angola, 1914–1915) The campaign in southern Portuguese West Africa (modern-day Angola) took place from October 1914 – July 1915. Portuguese forces in southern Angola were reinforced by a military expedition led by Lieutenant-Colonel Alves Roçadas, which arrived at Moçâmedes on 1 October 1914. After the loss of the wireless transmitter at Kamina in Togoland, German forces in South-West Africa could not communicate easily and until July 1915 the Germans did not know if Germany and Portugal were at war (war was declared by Germany on 9 March 1916.). On 19 October 1914, an incident occurred in which fifteen Germans entered Angola without permission and were arrested at fort Nautila and in a mêlée three Germans were killed by Portuguese troops. On 31 October, German troops armed with machine-guns launched a surprise attack, which became known as the Cuangar Massacre on the small Portuguese outpost at Cuangar and killed eight soldiers and a civilian.
On 18 December a German force of 500 men under the command of Major Victor Franke attacked Portuguese forces at Naulila. A German shell detonated the munitions magazine at Forte Roçadas and the Portuguese were forced to withdraw from the Ovambo region to Humbe, with 69 dead, 76 wounded, and 79 troops taken prisoner. The Germans lost 12 soldiers killed and 30 wounded. Local civilians collected Portuguese weapons and rose against the colonial regime. On 7 July 1915, Portuguese forces under the command of General Pereira d’Eça reoccupied the Humbe region and conducted a reign of terror against the population. The Germans retired to the south with the northern border secure during the uprising in Ovambo, which distracted Portuguese forces from operations further south. Two days later German forces in South West Africa surrendered, ending the South-West Africa Campaign.”

Bennett stamps adds this:

“On 13 September (1914), the German police station in Ramansdrift on the Orange River was raided by Union troops. On the 14th, the British Steamer “Armada Castle” bombarded Swakopmund. On the 18th, British warships laid anchor in the harbor of Lüderitzbucht. The German local authority and most of the population fled the city by rail. Enemy troops landed on the 19th and quickly took over the post office and signal station. The post office officials left Lüderitzbucht on the 14th and returned 2 days later, but forgot to bring the date slugs for the cancellers from Aus. From the 17th to lunch time on the 18th the dates were inserted by hand or left out” [http://www.bennettstamps.com/cgi-bin/lot_auc.php?site=1&sale=298&lot=4299]

“Towards lunch time on 18 September, part of the post office staff left with the postal devices on the last train to Aus. Between lunch time and 16.00hrs., a few postal officials, who were on horseback, stayed behind and processed the remaining few pieces of mail. These were cancelled in manuscript. The remaining officials then left Lüderitzbucht at 16.00hrs.” [http://www.bennettstamps.com/cgi-bin/lot_auc.php?site=1&sale=298&lot=4300]

On 9/7/1915 the German army was defeated by soldiers from the South African Union. Between 1915 and 1923 South African Stamps were used, with local SWA cancellations. In some places German colonial stamps were still in use.

“1915 South West Africa, 1915 censored 'On Active Service' envelope to Oxford, England, with a fine strike of the scarce violet boxed Field Post Office '47' handstamp. This was in use at USAKOS from the 8th June 1915, but was short-lived. A boxed bilingual censor cachet is also on the front of the cover. A very scarce F.P.O. cancellation, and this is the one that is illustrated in Putzel's book on South West Africa.”

“1915 South West Africa, 1915 censored German 'Feldpostkarte' bearing a South African Kings Head ½d tied by a captured neutral 'Wanderstempel' with the number '1' at the top dated 11 / 7 / 15. A blue crayon manuscript 'Passed Censor, AG' is on the front of the card. A message on the back has been written in German. This canceller was used at TSUMEB for a very short period (between July and August 1915) after the town fell to the South African forces. At that time the Post Office was under Military control. Described by Putzel as being 'Very Rare', this is a fine example of this canceller.”
“1915 (9 Aug.) censored, Prisoner of War stampless envelope from Gibeon to a POW at Aus (30.8), redirected to Swakopmund, via Windhoek (3.9), showing rare violet Gibeon "curved bar" c.d.s. 1915 South West Africa, 1915 censored envelope to Swakopmund bearing a South Africa Kings Head 1d cancelled by a very fine strike of the rare boxed Field Post Office '57' dated 29 NOV 1915. Alongside is a straight line OTJIWARONGO handstamp. (Putzel B 2) On the back of the cover are Usakos 2 DEC and Swakopmund 3 DEC 1915 transit and arrival datestamps. A very fine example of this rare F.P.O. and town cancel combination used on civilian mail.”

FIELD TELEGRAPHS AND POSTAL CORPS NOV 8 1915 with a straight line OTJIWARONGO alongside. (This is the cover from which Putzel illustrates his cancel in the book on the Cancellations of South West Africa.) Windhuk and Swakopmund 15 NOV 15 transit and arrival cancels are on the back of the cover. This cancel is extremely hard to find in anything other than this slightly watery condition. A rare cover.”

On reverse Windhoek oval 16.10, Karibib ds 19 OCT and block of four TRANSVAAL ½d Postage Due stamps tied by three strikes of the Karibib cds 21 OCT. Wonderful "Interprovincial" use of residual Transvaal Postage Dues which had validity due to the South African administration of the SWA Territory. A rare piece.”

The cover was opened and resealed by the censor with tape but there is also a red manuscript ‘98’ at the upper left corner and a red tick, probably both markings by censors. A circular PASSED CENSOR C handstamp unusually has ‘17’ and the date 15.4.16 inserted in manuscript. On the back is a Cape Town 17 APR 1916 Censor cachet. It would appear as though this cover was censored more than usual !”

“1919 preprinted German Government rainfall report, sent unfranked to Windhoek and endorsed O.H.M.S. with a good strike of the scarce violet OKASISE RAIL 1 JAN 1919 rubber handstamp, with the "1" in the year slug being a broken "0". It would appear as though they were short of "1"s at the beginning of the year. Interestingly the boxed "Irrigation Department Windhuk" is dated 3 APR 1916. It would appear as though these reports were sent out in bulk to villages and towns and were then used over the next few years.”
