Contents

1. The enigmatic Corded Ware Culture
   1.1 The Corded Ware Culture: The state of affairs
   1.2 The European Corded Ware society:
      General characteristics
   1.3. The NWO-Odyssee project: Unlocking Noord-Holland’s Late Neolithic Treasure Chest
      1.3.1 Introduction
      1.3.2 Aims of the project, sample, methodology, the team and research questions
      1.3.3 Research questions of the current thesis
      1.3.4 The structure of the thesis

2. The domestic Corded Ware Culture in Europe and the Netherlands: An overview
   2.1 Introduction
   2.2 Domestic contexts in European Corded Ware Culture
   2.3 The Corded Ware Culture in the Netherlands
      2.3.1 The chronology of the Corded Ware Culture in the Netherlands and the history of the research
      2.3.2 The discovery of Corded Ware Culture settlements in the Netherlands
      2.3.3 Corded Ware settlements of the coastal barriers and older dunes areas
      2.3.4 Corded Ware settlements of the central river district
      2.3.5 Corded Ware settlements of the northern, central and southern Dutch Pleistocene areas

6.7.1 Animal material
6.7.2 Plant resources
6.7.3 Unspecified resources
6.8 Bone technology and typology
6.9 Bone use
6.10 Amber: Technology and typology
6.11 The use of amber
6.12 The spatial distribution of flint, stone and bone implements and amber ornaments: The use of the space at Zeewijk
6.13 Conclusion: Group composition and site function

7. The domestic implements of the Corded Ware Culture: An overview

7.1 Flint, stone, bone and amber procurement networks
7.2 Knowledge as praxis: Techno-typological analysis of the flint, stone and bone implements and amber ornaments
   7.2.1 Flint
   7.2.2 Stone
   7.2.3 Bones
7.3 Domestic activities at the Corded Ware settlements
   7.3.1 Tools to make tools
   7.3.2 The use of vegetal resources
      7.3.2.1 The use of plants as a food source
      7.3.2.2 The use of plants as equipment and construction material
7.3.3 Animal resources

7.3.3.1 Animals as a food source

7.3.3.2 The use of animal resources as equipment and for the production of other implements

7.4 The selection of flint tools for functional purposes

7.5 Conclusions

8. The settlement implements during the fourth and third millennia BC

8.1 Introduction

8.2 TRB group

8.2.1 Flint, stone and amber procurement network

8.2.2 Techno-typological analysis of the flint, stone and amber implements

8.2.3 The use of the tools during the TRB period

8.2.4 Settlement tools as identity markers: The TRB flint

8.3 Vlaardingen

8.3.1 Flint, stone, amber, jet and bone procurement networks

8.3.2 Techno-typological analysis of the flint, stone and bone implements and jet and amber ornaments

8.3.3 The use of tools in the Vlaardingen Culture

8.3.4 The role of flint, stone and bone implements in the Vlaardingen Culture

8.4 The Corded Ware Culture as a local development: the role of Vlaardingen and TRB groups as generators of knowledge
9. Conclusions

9.1 The perception and appropriation of the landscape
9.2 Knowledge, continuity and group composition
9.3 Chaînes opératoires and cross-craft interaction
9.4 Form vs function
9.5 The function of Corded Ware settlements
9.6 Contribution to technological studies and future research
